Nearly every pattern of % Horse Blanket is imitated in color and style. In most cases the imitation looks just as good as the genuine, but it hasn't the warp threads, and so lacks strength, and while it sells for only a little less than the genuine it isn't worth one-half as much. Parnell's Remains Laid in Their Resting Place.

THE FUNERAL VERY QUIET.

No Disturbances of Any Kind Interfered With the Obsequies.

Forty Thousand People Followed the Body to the Grave Dillon, O'Brien and Sexton Watched the Cortege From Under Cover The Remains Lay la State at Dublin City Hall Where They Were Viewed By as Enermous Concourse-A Simple Service at the Grave in Glasnavia Cemetery-Sirs. Parzell's Pitiable

LONDON, Oct. 12 .- The Parnell funeral passed off very peacefully. That there was no disturbance was owing to the wise resolve of the Anti-Parnellites not to be present. William O'Brien, John Dillon and Sexton watched the scane from the window of a friend's house on the route of the procession. The curtain was kept closed, so that the three M. P's only had furtive glances at the great demonstration, while they themselves remained entirely hidden from view.

It is said that Mr. Dillon had expressed his intention of witnessing the funeral, whatever the result to himselt, and that it was with some difficulty that and that it was with some difficulty that he was induced to run no more risk than that of peeping Tom. In nearly all the churches in Ireland yesterlay some allusion was made to the death of Parnell. In some instances the mention was charitable; in other cases it was a reflection of the language of Archbishop Walsh in the Dublin "Catholia."

Friends of Parnell claim that the bishes that gives assert to survey to a seriest to a survey t bishop had given secret instructions that his memory should be attacked by the clergy, with the view of injuring the Parnellite cause as much as possible. In several instances admirers of Purnell left their sears in the churches when they heard anything of an effensive character. The funeral and sivices from all parts of Ireland show that the Parnellite cause has been strengthened by his death, and that he has left a party that will go on under a new leader

The Obsequies. Parnell's remains arrived at Kingston at 7 s. m. yesterday. There was no demonstration along the line from London demonstration along the line from London until Chester was reached, when deputations from Liverpool, Manchester, Prestor and Newerstle, all destined for Dublin, joined the train. The Parliamentary colleagues of Mr. Parnell, including John Redmond, John O'Connor, Joseph Nolan, Dr. Fitzgerald, James O'Keliy and Henry Campbell were among the people that greeted the deputations on their arrival at Holyhead, where the train got in at 2 o'clock in the moraling, in wet and hazy weather, that well became the mountulness of the scene.

Groups were collected on the quay to watch the transfer of the coffin from the train to the mailboat Ireland. It was a depressing spectacle. The coffin was deposited in an enclosure specially fitted up for it. Throughout the voyage across the stormy and dark waters that separate the two countries, some of the Parnellius were all the time on grand.

Among the watchers was the Lord Mayor of Bublin, High Shoriff Meade and J. H. Parnell a brother of the departed.

At the Kingston pier a multitude was gathered to receive the remains.

The Westland Row station in Dublin was reached at 7:30 a.m. A vast silent crowd awaited with uncoverd heads, as the train steamed into the station. Timothy Harrington, M. P., was there, and Dr. Hackett, who attended Parnell when his eyes were nurt at Kilkenny, and they joined the band of mourners. Conspicuous in front of the dense masses of people were members of the Gaelic and Athletic societies, with their hurlers and Athletic societies, with their burlers used in their sports, draped black, and tied with grean ribbon. The representa-tives of branches of the National League wors black badges, on which were the dying words of Purnell: "Give my love to my colleagues and the Irish nation."

When the remains had been removed in solemn silence from the train, the coffin was taken from the case that encoffin was taken from the case that enveloped it and was lifted into the hearse, the glass panels of which permitted a full exposure of the coffin to public view. The case in which the coffin had been enclosed on the way to Dublin was laid aside. The crowd immediately seized upon and broke it into small pieces, to carry away as mementoes of the dead.

As the hearse moved from the station a body of police formed before the procession, which, without any design or marshalling, appeared to full into an orderly line in purely extemporized fashion. A band and the V-orkingmen's Union, followed next after the police, the

The City Hall of Dublin was reached at 8:30 a m. The front of the hall was covered with combre draperies, and a dense rain streamed down as the collin was borne into the hall toward the catawas borne into the hall toward the cata-falque. The rain did not diminish the vast concourse that throughd toward the hall, ignoring the elements in their anxiety to show their esteem for their beloved leader. It was an assembling of remarkable serenity. Reverential quiet pervated the crowd, unbroken by partisan cries, or the remotest symptom to disorder. to disorder.

At 10 o'clock the gates were opened and the people poured into the interior. The body lay in state in thit council-chamber, a large circular room, now heavily draped in black, relieved by serolls of white satin in hooped festoons, bearing in black letters the last words of Parnell. The coffin, which rotted on a raised data in the centre of the chamber. raised dais in the centre of the chamber, was buried under masses of wreaths, floral crosses, Irishharps and other floral designs. Conspictions on the coffin were three wreaths from Mrs. Parnell, a cross and anchor, and circle, with inscriptions. From 10 o'clock until 2 a continuous atream of people poured into the City Hall. It is estimated that the people who paid their tribute of respect to the dead numbered at least forcy thousand. At 3:45 the funeral cortege stated for the stars.
